

Assignment Number One

Due before first class meeting

The course does not have textbooks, case books, or anything like that. It is not effective to send students to the library, to the internet, or to other sources to obtain the documents, so I have created the forms used in this course. The materials are extensive, but how much reading will be up to the individual student.

For me to send you the materials, I know where to send them. I have created a simple form for you to complete and to forward. I have asked two questions, besides your email. I need to have your cell phone number, so if I have to cancel class, I can text you and let you know. I also want to know what your experience levels are, both in previous oil and gas courses and in industry work. That tells me how I can best teach the course. Finally, for those of you who might be foreign LLMS, it helps to contrast United States law and practice to your home country.

Before the first class, fill out the student information form and return it. Read the syllabus.

Once I have the completed student information form and photo, I will send you the course materials, via an Adobe link, which will allow you to access the materials during the course. Those materials will be deleted after the class is over, so you may wish to download them.

Important: make sure you have the latest version of Adobe Acrobat Reader, available at Adobe.com, or you won't be able to use the course materials. Even better, you may wish to get a copy of Adobe Acrobat DC, which may be available at a discount for students.
