NEW YORK UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF LAW
ENVIRONMENTAL LAW ESSAY CONTEST

Contest
The winning essay will receive a prize of $1000, courtesy of the New York University Center for Environmental and Land Use Law, and will be published in the New York University Environmental Law Journal. Other exceptional essays will also be considered for publication in the Journal.

Topic
Address an environmental law issue of current national or international significance.

Eligibility
The contest is open to all students enrolled in any United States law school. The contest is also open to students who have graduated from a U.S. law school within the last year. Essays must be original; they may have been submitted for course credit, but they must not have been published elsewhere or have been written as part of paid employment.

Judging
All entries will be judged by the Editorial Board of the New York University Environmental Law Journal. Finalist entries will be judged by the ELJ Editors-in-Chief, the ELJ Developments Editor, along with Professor Katrina Wyman and guest judge Michael B. Gerrard, Partner, Arnold & Porter. A brief profile of our guest judge will introduce the winning essay when published.

Format
Essays must present complete, well-reasoned and well-supported arguments. Entries must follow the latest version of the Bluebook Rules of Citation, with footnotes, and must be submitted electronically in Microsoft Word or Wordperfect format (preferably Word).

To Enter
Submit entries electronically to law.elj@nyu.edu with the subject heading, “2004 Essay Contest.” Entries must be received via e-mail no later than midnight, January 8, 2004. Include with your entry a cover letter stating your name, phone number, name of law school, year of graduation, and a statement that the essay was not written as part of paid employment and that it has not been published. Violations of the contest rules may result in disqualification.

Deadline
January 8, 2004 (The winner will be announced by January 23, 2004).
